we all decode non verbal communication on a daily basis most of it goes unnoticed even to ourselves but we all do it however although we are relatively good in determining moods and intentions from another person s non verbal behaviour there is still a lot we are yet unable to see since i was a small child i have been fascinated by the idea to learn more about other people through their body language and other non verbal cues after i had started my studies in austria i also got more and more interested in international business specifically the cultural aspects of it this interest intensified after my various experiences with people from other cultures in austria and abroad i could not help but to notice that my conversations just not went as smoothly as i was used to when conversing with a fellow austrian thus it was a natural choice for me to try to bring both aspects together when the time for choosing my master thesis topic had arrived the result is a fairly comprehensive coverage of non verbal communication in the context of culture and business which is entirely based on research the five factor model across cultures was designed to further an understanding of the interrelations between personality and culture by examining the dominant paradigm for personality assessment the five factor model or ffm in a wide variety of cultural contexts this volume provides a comprehensive overview of contemporary research and theory about personality traits and culture that is extremely relevant to personality psychologists cross cultural psychologists and psychological anthropologists centred on the metaphor of bridges and knots this volume investigates the dialogic and dialectical relationships between socially dissimilar and topographically distant cultures the contributions here explore various methodological frameworks for discourses and theories that purport to conceptualize cultural spaces which as opposed to objective geographical areas are characterized by the propensity to bind topographical distances by means of symbolic ties and perimeters the chapters address possible juxtapositions and intersections of spatial and temporal dimensions of cultural practice religious and ethical ties and knots between lands and cultures disconnections between historical literary and cultural epochs discourses of cultural entanglement and cultural ensnarement on individual and social levels and the possibilities of raising aesthetic bridges between various cultures in music poetry and visual arts among other topics the relationship between mind and culture has become a prominent and fashionable issue in psychology during the last quarter of the twentieth century the conflict is between those who see the human mind as being generated from and an intimate part of culture and those usually termed cognitivists who view the mind as essentially separate from the environment gustav jahoda traces the historical origins of this conflict to demonstrate that thinkers preoccupation with the relationship between mind and culture is not new the salient issues began to crystallize three centuries ago in europe in the form of two distinct traditions whose contrasting conceptions of human nature and the human mind still remain the focus of current debates the dominant tradition was produced by the scientific approach that had proved so successful in the physical realm this view associated with the enlightenment holds that mind is an essential part of nature and subject to its fixed laws as a result of the influence of external factors such as climate and ecology mind creates culture but remains essentially unchanged the opposite view which dates back to vico and was espoused by anti enlightenment thinkers is that the mind is separate from nature an entity that both creates and is extensively modified by culture in a constant cycle of mutual determination the growing prestige of experimental psychology has led to a heated debate between supporters of the rival traditions is psychology a science or a cultural discipline jahoda identifies the current form of this debate as but a phase in psychology s long fascination with the role that culture plays in the formation of the mind which has led to the recent emergence of cultural psychology crossroads between culture and mind is a formidable achievement by one of europe s most distinguished and erudite psychologists
