ACCA Paper F2 covers a broad range of management accounting topics. Here's a breakdown of some key areas and how you can approach them effectively:

- 1. Costing (Absorption Costing vs Marginal Costing)
This is a fundamental difference. Absorption costing includes fixed overhead in the product cost, while marginal costing only includes variable costs. Let's illustrate:
- Example A company produces 1000 units. Variable cost per unit is 10, and fixed overhead is 5000.
- 2. Absorption Costing
10 + 5000/1000 = 15 per unit
- Marginal Costing
10 per unit

Understanding the implications of each method on profit calculation is crucial.

Activity-Based Costing (ABC)
ABC assigns overhead costs based on activities, providing a more accurate cost per product compared to traditional methods.

Example A company produces two products, A and B. ABC considers the number of machine hours and the number of setups for each product when allocating overhead.
